

I am against broadband internet service over power lines. The tests done in Japan and Britain show that this service would create significant interference with aircraft, military, ham radio and other emergency communication systems that are much more important than adding broadband service to power lines. The technology has not been refined enough to prevent interference with existing systems.